Charter of Sovereign Republic

Adopted by members during a vote at the congress on December 6, 2020.

By joining the Sovereign Republic political movement, I subscribe to the following fundamental principles and undertake to respect them within the framework of my activities within the movement and, a fortiori, if I am elected or representative of the Republic.

1. France must be fully sovereign and truly democratic. The Republic is indivisible, secular, democratic and social. Liberty – Equality – Fraternity – Secularism, that's the fight!

2. National sovereignty belongs to the people. The members of the Sovereign Republic intend to return it to him. The citizens' initiative referendum must be instituted in France.

3. Building a sovereign France requires a strong State, capable of defending the political and economic independence of the Nation, reestablishing France in its power, in its greatness and in its universal mission. If it has been weakened by decades of neoliberalism, abandonment of the homeland, globalization, Atlanticist submission and betrayal of the elites, we are committed to restoring France to a state with the means to act. Its administrative organization must be national, departmental and municipal.

4. The members of the Sovereign Republic place their political struggle within the framework of the institutions of the Republic, the Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen of 1789, the preamble of the Constitution of 1946 and the Constitution of 1958. They work towards the necessary democratic deepening of institutions.

5. The members of the Sovereign Republic are heirs of the National Council of the Resistance and its "Happy Days" program. They defend the general interest and the common good.

6. The Republic ensures equality before the law for all citizens without distinction of origin, religion, gender

11. The French have an inalienable right to security, safety, health, education, protection in old age, work, justice, culture and modern communication tools – in a word to the Social Republic. It is the duty of politicians, and therefore of members of the sovereign Republic, to make this right real and concrete. Democracy is absent from an entire section of society: businesses, particularly multinationals. Employees must be involved in their management.

12. The Republic is secular. Identities linked to foreign or regional origin, religion, gender or sexual orientation are respected in Sovereign Republic. Important in the lives of humans, they must not, however, create a division between them in their lives as citizens; they must not cause any discrimination against them, nor provide any particular advantage in public spaces. Sovereign Republic fights communitarianism which fragments the political body of citizens, destroys any common project of social emancipation, by making society a field of identity confrontation. It fights discrimination by using all the levers of the State.

13. Members of the Sovereign Republic are committed to freedom of thought, conscience and expression within the limits provided by law – incitement to hatred, defamation and insult are prohibited. No form of censorship – whether direct, through intimidation, or indirect, through the invocation of blasphemy or offense – can hinder it. This freedom must be supported by that of the media, whose independence from the powers of finance and foreign influences must be guaranteed.

or sexual orientation. France respects all people and their freedom to believe or not to believe.

Xenophobia, racism and anti-Semitism are not tolerated in any form in the Sovereign Republic.

Equality between women and men is an imprescriptible principle.

7. Members of the Sovereign Republic are patriots.

Proud of the history of their country taken as a block, aware of its gray areas and the contradictions that it has been able to overcome, they consider the French people as a political nation made up of citizens sharing the memory of happiness, of successes, sometimes painful trials from the past and the desire to continue traveling together. Being a citizen has rights, but also duties.

8. The members of the Sovereign Republic refuse any policy going against the interests of the people and the Nation, especially when it only serves a ruling class disconnected from the common good. This is why they undertake to consider national law – the law that the Nation has chosen – as superior in principle to any supranational regulation contrary to the interests of the people of France and to any foreign law claiming extraterritoriality. Therefore, European treaties unfavorable to France and its citizens must be repealed and the European Union must be replaced by a Europe of cooperation between sovereign states. France must leave NATO. Monetary, financial, budgetary and geopolitical sovereignty, without which there is no Nation, must be reestablished. A referendum must be organized to validate these decisions by the French people.

9. The members of the Sovereign Republic are universalists and consider all human beings as a single planetary family sharing the same destiny. France adheres to the perfectible United Nations system in which it has a particular responsibility. It respects the sovereignty of other States and helps other nations to build it through cooperation.

14. The French must have equal access to education. This aims to train citizens and promote talents useful to the Republic through the pursuit of excellence from CAP to doctorate. The principle of education must be meritocratic, that is to say a tool for social promotion, and not for the reproduction of a social hierarchy not “based on common utility”.

15. National solidarity or the existence of natural monopolies require the maintenance of public services controlled by the State in education, health, defense, dependency, transport, energy and telecommunications throughout of its territory, including territories in serious neglect such as the overseas departments. France must rebuild an industrial strategy ensuring its power and its interests.

16. France must once again equip itself with a strategic state capable of promoting major achievements like Ariane or Airbus. A profound reform of the administration, its responsibilities, rights and duties must be carried out. Furthermore, a major tax reform must be implemented in order to promote social and fiscal justice, and favor work rather than capital.

17. The preservation of the environment, of biodiversity, that is to say of the very conditions of survival of humanity, is a central fight for the members of the Sovereign Republic, who are committed to fighting against the threat global impact on the planet – global warming – to defend France's energy sovereignty, to decarbonize its economy as much as possible and to organize the ecological transition. This implies in particular promoting short circuits, promoting non-polluting transport such as rail, forcing multinationals to respect strict environmental and health standards, encouraging the thermal renovation of buildings throughout the national territory and conserving much that safe nuclear energy under state control.

10. While respecting the principles of the United Nations and France's commitments in matters of asylum, the members of the Sovereign Republic consider that our country must regain control of its borders by enforcing its decisions. Immigration must be regulated according to the country's capacities and the interests of the Nation, in particular by restricting economic immigration and family reunification. Immigrants have rights, but also duties, such as loyalty and respect for the laws and values of France and the Republic: Liberty, Equality, Fraternity, Secularism. Their integration presupposes a reciprocal effort: the immigrant must be welcomed humanely and decently; in return, he must integrate into French society according to his own tradition of assimilation and link his destiny to that of France.

18. The members of the Sovereign Republic undertake to defend France's food sovereignty, based on environmentally friendly agricultural practices, which guarantee a decent income for farmers and agricultural employees, and promote the relocation of production as well as the repopulation of the countryside.

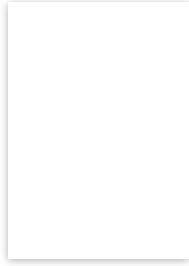

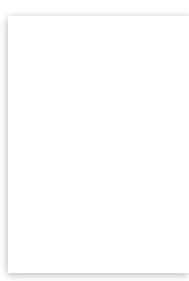

19. The members of the Sovereign Republic understand that “debt” is the weapon of the oligarchic powers to destroy France, the State and public services a little more each year. They undertake to conduct an audit of the debt and, like their illustrious predecessors, to reject part of it if the best interests of the Nation require it.

20. The Republic is in danger! Too many of its elites put their personal or group interests ahead of those of the Nation and the common good. With Jean-Jacques Rousseau, we declare that “nothing is more dangerous than the influence of private interests in public affairs”. These private interests, the powers of money, can only be constrained by a strong state and irreproachable servants. At the Sovereign Republic, we are committed to serving only the French people and France and to fighting against all forms of corruption.
